The Secretary General shall review these and, where deemed appropriate, shall request the General Legal Counsel to advise the National Organization, should there be conflict with the organization's constitution.

BYLAW 3-22. GROUPS OF NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS:

For the purpose of improving relations among National Organizations with a common interest, to abolish isolationism, and in order to further JCI's goals, some National Organizations have the faculty to establish closer bonds in a formal way. Whenever and wherever a group of National Organizations, with an organizational structure, is formed, it may elect its own officers, who will work in conjunction with the JCI World Headquarters.

BYLAW 3-23. RELATIONS WITH THE ORGANIZATION:

Provided that the terms of the National Organization constitution are not in conflict with the pertinent provisions of this Constitution, and the National Organization subscribes to the Declaration of Principles and Purposes of JCI, its organization and composition are the internal concern of the members of the nation it serves. The organization looks to the young people of each nation to develop, primarily through their own initiative, a representative and effective vehicle for service to the nation and its communities. It is contrary to the tradition of the organization to interfere in the internal affairs of a National Organization or to rule between competing or coexisting JCI-type organizations within a nation.
